“ Carroll was my older brother, loyal friend, companion of my childhood and youth and best friend right into young adulthood. He loved music, both classical and country, collected trains, participated in civil war reenactments, collected antique weapons, and loved Baileys Irish Creme on his ice cream and Bloomin Onions! Quiet, unassuming, kind, respectful, he was part of the Woodstock Story and he will be remembered fondly by those who knew him! I will always remember the long talks we had while growing up, his walking me to school, our trips to the Uptown Theater to see the cowboy and and those funny space invader type movies. We played cowboys and Indians, made bows and arrows, almost burned down Momma’s lilac bush when we built a tepee on it and built a fire inside! Oh the memories of hanging out with Carroll and Ford Dysart. They even let me go trick or treating with them.

There will never be a more wonderful man and we, his sisters and brothers and those who knew him are richly blessed that he was in our lives for 80 years. Farewell precious friend. Heaven has gained the best of the best!
